Portraits in Gray, A Civil War Photography Exhibit

- When: July - December 2007
- Where: Southern Museum of Civil War and Locomotive History
- Cost: Free with paid admission to Museum
- Description: "Portraits in Gray, A Civil War Photography Exhibition" features the Civil War photographic collection of David Wynn Vaughan, a long time collector and expert in photography of the period. "Portraits in Gray" is a unique multi-themed gallery which attempts to humanize the Southern soldiers of the conflict (and by extension Union soldiers as well) by presenting the original images of the soldiers in a greatly enlarged and crystal clear framed format. The humanizing aspect of the gallery is presented in three sections entitled "Citizen Soldiers", "Brothers in Arms" and "Youth at War".

The gallery also touches upon the importance of the images from the conflict for all interpreters and students. These images often serve as evidence of what the written records only touch upon or can not fully explain with words or narrative. This important topic is addressed in three distinct sections; "Georgia Military Institute", "Snapshots in Time" and Bowie Knives & Muskets". Finally, the third theme of the gallery addresses the topic of the photography and important photographers of the era. A view behind the lens, as it was during that time period.
